PREFACE

The bibliography "Magazines for Children" is the second in a series of informative materials being developed by the Bombay Community Public Trust (BCPT) to assist and strengthen the work being undertaken by its NGO partners in developing and promoting reading, amongst children; both for pleasure and for acquisition of knowledge.

Reading magazines can be an appealing activity for children, replete as they are with special characters, pictures that come alive as the stories unfold, comics, quizzes, puzzles and games, riddles and jokes, craft projects, contests, profiles of children doing amazing things, informative articles and other features.

Magazines are an important source of motivation because children enjoy reading a shorter, more "adult" format with colorful pictures and kid-interest topics. Through reading magazines, children improve critical thinking and reading skills; besides getting valuable support for classroom work.

Lesley Mandel Morrow and Joy Lesnick (http://teacher.scholastic.com/products/classmags/files/Mag_Research_Summary_1.pdf) note that "no other medium can capture children's interests or expand their worlds as effectively as magazines" and that they were found to be "non-threatening, inviting, manageable, and reader-friendly"—a perfect way to engage students and get them reading.

They help children of diverse age and skill levels. From pre-school to teenagers, magazines provide for varying interests. Magazines also serve as "motivation for slow and reluctant readers, while more capable students can use higher levels of reading and thinking skills."
Children's magazines thus occupy an important place on the bookshelf. This bibliography will serve as a ready reckoner to facilitate the selection and ordering of magazines for different target groups of children.

The bibliography provides an annotated list of magazines in English, Hindi and Marathi for Indian children. They are listed in alphabetic order with a language index at the end. While the majority of magazines are published in India, a few magazines for non-resident Indian children are also included.

Children's magazines are not attractive for advertisers and hence publishing them is often not cost effective. Many popular magazines such as Target, Disney Today, Tamasha, have had to cease publication. An e-magazine may be an alternative publishing model. Most of the magazines included are in print form though a few e-magazines have begun to make an appearance. There are a large number of international online magazines for children. A few popular ones are listed after the bibliography to provide an indication of the range and variety possible.

Attempt has been made to look at each of the magazines included. However, some magazines listed by the Department of Libraries, Government of Maharashtra could not be verified. These have been included with an asterisk (*) against the title. A look at the information available on the website of the Registrar of Newspapers (http://mi.nic.in) seems to suggest that there are many more - particularly in Hindi and Marathi - which we have not been able to locate and verify.

The Bibliography has been compiled to help libraries in schools and communities as well as public libraries to be used as a resource. It will help them to purchase and add to the collection of books and magazines.

Known over the years for producing intelligent reading, the magazine was first published on August 15, 1906. The brainchild of Va Go Apte, a teacher, Anand was the result of Apte’s belief that like adults, children also need some good reading. So, it began as a 40 page issue for children with a 40 page addition for older students and women. Over the years, it has focused on providing quality reading about current issues, general knowledge, political happenings and more. Interestingly, Anand did its patriotic bit in India’s freedom struggle through its writings. Printed fully in black & white the magazine is one of the oldest children’s magazines in India.

Named after a tropical flower, one of the oldest magazines published for children Champak consists of modern stories with a moral message. The signature style of Champak is its stories based on animals. The magazine is able to draw readers into a world of knowledge and facts and also teases children's creative abilities through healthy competitions.
Annotation:
The children's magazine, Chandamama, now more than half-a-century old, literally means uncle moon. Chandamama is within easy reach of every child, as it is published in English and eleven Indian languages, including Sanskrit. The magazine was launched with an aim to entertain and educate young minds about the rich traditions of India. Chandamama has been delighting readers since then with engrossing stories, amazing facts, and thought-provoking features. Mention Chandamama, and one will instantly recall popular features such as Vikram/Vetal, stunning artwork, and beautiful renditions of mythological tales. Known for its vibrant illustrations and accurate depiction of traditional stories, the magazine has maintained its position as a brand that you can trust.
 Annotation:
A bi-lingual magazine has sections mostly in Marathi but one or two items at the end of the issue are in English. A simple magazine with lots of short stories stressing on moral values along with sections on G.K and informative articles, humorous anecdotes all written in very simple language makes it an ideal children's magazine.

Annotation:
Over the last 35 years Kishor has played a major role in informal education. One of the cardinal principles of Kishor’s editorial policy, as laid down at the time of inception, is that it should help its young readers to develop a rational and scientific outlook towards life. In pursuance of this policy, a certain number of pages are allotted every month to articles and features on science, technology, global geography, social history, sports and like subjects. These articles are written in lucid language, avoiding too many technical terms or being dryly informative to keep the children abreast of the latest development in the various fields around them.

Nandan, an HT Media children’s magazine is over 40 years old and is extremely popular among children and their families. The magazine was started in November 1964 in the memory of Pandit Jawahar Lal Nehru, with its first issue being dedicated to the late Prime Minister. Nandan triumphs over its contemporaries because its stories are a combination of the best in both Indian traditional and modern cultural ethos. Nandan believes in shaping the mind and behaviour of children in a positive way, and to challenge their minds by exposing them to new ideas from the world of science and technology. From its very inception, Nandan has been privileged to publish the stories, memoirs, excerpts, biographies and poems of many great people in the fields of literature and politics.

In the year 2001 the editorial team of Bal Mazdoor Ki Awaz decided to expand their initiative to other parts of the country and in the month of May, 2001 "Workshop on Children’s Production of their own Newspaper" was organized with 40 rural and urban children associated with 12 NGOs from 7 states of India. The outcome of this workshop was children from each NGO group started publishing their own bi-monthly (once in two months) newspaper.

In February 2002, a follow-up workshop was organized by the same editorial team to share and learn from each other’s experiences and also to discuss "How to take this initiative forward". Child delegates of the follow-up workshop unanimously felt the need to have an identity as journalists and therefore decided to organize themselves into a "Rashtriya Bal Patrakar Manch" or the National Child Journalists' Forum (NCJF).

In the year 2003, NCJF was consolidated. First issue of "National Children’s Times" was launched during 4th World Social Forum held in Mumbai, which was attended by adults and NGOs from various parts of India and abroad. Since then it is being published on a regular basis.
